Abstract

Today's economy shows us how real the possibilities are that any one of us could be 'looking for a new opportunity' at any time. This presentation will demonstrate how the search for a new job should be handled as any project should be, i.e.

- Initiation (that's usually done for us by the company letting us go!)
- Planning (what is the approach to take, tools & techniques that will be used, what are the risks and opportunities and how can they be measured, scheduling, costing)
- Execution (some useful advice on how to get your next job)
- Control (measuring progress, keeping to the schedule, budget)
- Termination (transferring resources (mostly mental) to your new job, etc.)
